How to write great headlines

It’s specific.

Pretend an elevator door is shutting, and you want to tell someone on the other side about a story. This exercise will help you think of headlines that get right to the point and aren’t vague.

It’s easy to understand.

People will likely see your headline while scanning social media on their phone. So keep it simple. If it’s long and confusing, they’ll likely move on to something else after a couple of seconds.

It leads to a reaction.

It’s not overly clever.

Be cautious of the overly clever headline. Creativity is a good thing. And you want your headline to stand out. But be careful you’re not distracting people with a pun or an outdated cultural reference. Avoid being clever for the sake of being clever.

It captures the spirit of the story.

For more journalism tips and tricks, visit npr.org/training.